

Macron's speech: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Ino1E8UMVHg>

Hello to everyone.

This is a message for American researchers,

entrepreneurs,

engineers

working on climate change.

Last Saturday, I invited you to come to France and join European and French researchers to work on climate change here;

because here, you are welcome.

I do know how your new president now

has decided to jeopardise your budget, your initiatives

as he is extremely sceptical about climate change.

I have no doubt about climate change

and how committed we have to be regarding this issue.

So I have two messages.

The very first one, for the French and European researchers;

we will preserve our budgets,

we will reinforce our investment,

our public and private investment,

in order to do more and accelerate our initiative

in order to deliver in line with COP21.

And second, a message for you guys.

Please, come to France, you are welcome,

it's your nation, we like innovation.

We want innovative people.

We want people working on climate change,

energy, renewables and new technologies.

France is your nation.

Thanks.
